of the

mesencephalon \mez-en-'sē-ō-lān\ n.

ANATOMY and PHYSIOLOGY. The midbrain, a centrally located segment of the brain that includes the cerebral aqueduct, the cerebral aqueduct and the red nucleus.

The MESENCEPHALON is the short upper part of the brain stem that divides into two branches, the midbrain and the cerebrum.

mesentery \mes-'n-ter-ē\ n.

A fold in the peritoneum, a part of the abdominal wall, that connects the digestive tube to the abdominal wall.

Blood vessels and nerves pass through the mesentery to the organs of the body.

mesoderm \mez-ə-'dārm\ n.

ZOOLOGY. The middle layer of cells in an animal embryo, the layer lying between the ectoderm and the endoderm.

The bones, muscles, blood vessels, reproductive organs and coverings of body cavities are formed from the cells of the MESODERM.

John Cage

Diary: How to Improve the World (You Will Only Make Matters Worse)

We practice what we practice. As we were walking along, she smiled and said, "You're never bored, are you." (Boredom dropped when we dropped our interest in climaxes.)

Taking His Chance: John Cage's Diary
by Alan Gilbert, in HYPERALLERGIC

The form is particularly effective in enabling the various layers of personal and social history to interact in a generally non-narrative way: artist friends and the Vietnam War; Buckminster Fuller and Chairman Mao; lunch with Merce Cunningham and his mother; David Tudor and Detroit; edible mushrooms and police violence; a lost wallet and the abolition of private property; airplane travel and communes . . .
and "on / and on." As with certain avant-garde work, the constraints Cage placed upon his diary's expressive qualities potentially open it to a wider range of material than a more traditional narrative mode might have allowed.

Forrester pass is usually the highest pass a pct'r or jmt'r goes over on the whole trail. That wasn't epic enough so after consulting my map I decided to go over junction pass instead. The route I took isn't marked on any recent map because the trail through there hasn't been maintained for over 50 years. The way was abandoned when the John Muir Trail started to accommodate pack animals, as the survival rate for the beasts would probably have been about 1 in 5.

To find the pass I followed the Bubbs Creek Valley up 3 successive plateaus, each of which held its own lake or lakes. When I reached the furthest lake in the chain I was met on all sides an impassibly steep bowl of shale and scree. Instead of going the whole way back around to the other side of Center Peak immediately, I thought to try going over the rocky ridge that separates the Bubbs Creek Valley with the PCT/JMT on the other side. From the side of the last lake it was about 800 ft of boulder scramble straight up to the top. Right before the ridge I found a trail that turned out to be the old Junction Pass Trail. The whole stretch from the ridge between the two valleys up to the pass were some of the nicest hiking I've ever done. The way down from the pass was terrifying. I went a thousand feet down an incredibly steep scree slope to the floor of a canyon, and then boulder hopped a thousand feet down the canyon floor to a trail that switchbacked precipitously down to a lovely meadow with a stream running through it. It was at this point I realized that I had misplaced my paper map. Lost, I followed some deer and found my way down and up and over some boulders to an established trail. The trail I found turned out to lead up to Shepard's pass, which is maybe the second hardest pass only after Whitney Portal.

I went up another steep and switchbacked thousand feet but the effort seemed well worth it when I caught site of the lake at the base of Tyndall Peak. I rested there , and ate, and left my pack there at the lake, and then climbed the peak just north of Mount Tyndall to watch the eclipse. The supermoon rose right after sunset and immediately started to eclipse. It was amazing; a revelation. Dear reader, I dare not go into detail for fear that even a retelling of what I experienced might cause paralysis or insanity. I attest my ability to withstand the crushing beauty on display to my rugged outdoor training.

The eclipse made it very hard to see on the way down. I had my headlamp, so I could pick my way from boulder to boulder, but I couldn't pick my route strategically at all. I knew I needed to travel downwards so that's what I did, but not very efficiently.

Eventually light returned. I found the Shepard's pass trail and followed it east of the pass back down to the JMT/PCT. I fell asleep at a campsite next to a burbling stream both exhausted and full of wonder.
